Domain 4: Curriculum and Planning Strand: Planning and management of teaching and learning process During my first week of Practicum, my mentor was very attentive to me. She has taught me and let me observe her ways of teaching. When it was my turn to develop my own lesson plan. I was anxious about how I could do well in constructing my own. As I completed my lesson plan, I sent it to my mentor for her to review its flow and content. She really sat down next to me and spent her time helping and guiding me to understand the things I have gaps with.	It is to check if my Lesson plan is ready for the demonstration. The mentor has to check if our lesson plan was coherent with the MELCs and if the objectives have met the required learning objectives for that lesson.	A lesson plan is crucial in every class. It is your guide on what to do and what will happen in the class.	Now, I can say that I have additional knowledge about how to construct a lesson plan. I can apply the knowledge and experience I have here to my future endeavors.

Domain 4: Curriculum and Planning Strand: Professional collaboration to enrich teaching practice This week, my mentor and I collaborated on our ideas to give performance tasks to the students. The outputs of the said tasks will be included in their exhibit next week.	Active collaboration is important to promote growth, especially within the learning-teaching process.	Through sharing ideas with one another, we are able to come up with ideal tasks that could improve the learning outcome of the students.	With this, I will keep in mind that others' opinions are necessary to improve certain aspects, especially within the learning-teaching process. Our ideas may be good but collaborating with others who have experience will greatly enhance our outputs.

I was informed before that there will be a drill, however, no designated time were given.	No specific time was given to test and evaluate the teachers' and students understanding of the school's emergency procedures.	Earthquake drills are organized to give students, teachers, and all other school staffs the opportunity to learn how to be safe in times of an earthquake.	Now, I have to keep myself alert and not panic so I can guide my students to safety. We have to always keep in mind that we are the ones responsible for our students in school, we have to teach them how to respond properly and how to keep safe in times of emergencies.

Domain 2: Learning Environment Strand: Promotion of purposive learning I have given the students a task that they have to perform this week, particularly last Wednesday. However, the performance was moved last Friday (March 17) because my mentor Ma'am Cabusa wasn't satisfied with their performance as it doesn't fit her and my expectations. So my mentor asked me to watch and guide them in regard to their performance.	It is a teacher's responsibility to guide the students and make them realize the connection between what they're doing in class and what is expected of them.	Through this, it will strengthen and enrich the students learning. Extending our guidance to them will lessen their anxiety and encourage meaningful learning.	Now, I will keep in mind, for my future ventures in the teaching field to always make an effort to support and guide our students throughout their learning journey. We just don't give them something because that's what's written within our lesson plans. I have learned that not all written in our lesson plan will be followed, so we have to be flexible and fast-thinker to address the problem unforeseen in our lesson plan.

Domain 5: Assessment and Reporting Strand: Monitoring and evaluation of learner progress and achievement I observed a new class as they reviewed for a periodical test during my first day of practice teaching with a new mentor. The teacher used a variety of strategies to keep the students engaged and motivated, while also providing opportunities for them to seek clarification on challenging topics.	The teacher wanted me to observe and learn first about her teaching style and the attitudes of the students. In this way, I'll be able to develop my own strategy for lesson delivery and devise my own class management.	Observing a class is crucial for practice teachers to learn from experienced educators and gain insights into effective teaching strategies. This helps them develop their own teaching style and align lesson plans with the curriculum. It also teaches them to use assessment data to support student learning, essential skills for successful educators.	I reflect on the experience and apply the learnings in my future practice teaching sessions. We should seek opportunities for observation and reflection, working with mentors and administrators to identify classes to learn from. Applying what we have learned can enhance teaching skills and improve effectiveness in the classroom.

WHAT HAPPENED?	WHY?	SO WHAT?	NOW WHAT?
Domain 7: Personal Growth and Professional Development. Strand 4: Professional reflection and learning to improve practice This week I had my first demo. It is the last module of quarter 3. The schedule is tight because the periodical is coming, so I had to deliver my topic effectively in a short amount of time. My mentor was absent also this week so I have to handle all of her classes including the ESP subject.	The situation mentioned involves reflecting on my experience and identifying opportunities for growth and development in my teaching practice. Practice teachers may be expected to take on the responsibility of handling their mentor's classes, including an unfamiliar subject area. This allows us to apply our knowledge in a practical setting and gain valuable teaching experience. It also allows us to learn new teaching strategies and techniques, as well as develop adaptability in different teaching environments.	This experience can help give an opportunity to develop our teaching skills and gain confidence in delivering a lesson effectively, even under challenging circumstances such as a tight schedule and having to handle additional classes due to a mentor's absence. It also allows us to reflect on our strengths and areas for improvement in their teaching practice.	As a student intern, I can use this learning experience to reflect on my teaching strategies and identify areas for improvement. I can seek feedback from my mentor and colleagues to gain insights into how I can further develop my teaching skills and deliver effective lessons. I can also explore different teaching methods and techniques to enhance my teaching effectiveness and meet the diverse needs of my students.

Domain 5: Assessment and Evaluation Strand 2: Monitoring and evaluation of learner progress and achievement This week I reviewed and assessed my students on the topic we had discussed. I'm glad most of them got high scores.	The experience is part of Domain 5 because I am conducting an assessment of students learning and progress. As a practice teacher, it is important to ensure that students are making progress and achieving learning outcomes. Assessing student learning can provide valuable feedback on teaching strategies and help to identify areas where students need more support. This feedback can then be used to adjust lesson plans and teaching techniques to improve student learning.	By assessing the student's understanding of the topic discussed, we are able to determine if our instructional methods were effective in conveying the information. This experience provides us with information on how well students have understood and retained the material covered in class and can help to identify areas where students may need additional support or instruction.	As future teachers, we should acknowledge our students' achievements, analyze the assessment data, and adjust our teaching strategies based on our experience of reviewing and assessing our students. Additionally, setting new goals for students and reflecting on our own teaching practices can support ongoing professional development.

WHAT HAPPENED?	WHY?	SO WHAT?	NOW WHAT?
Domain 2: Learning Environment, Strand 3: Management of Classroom Structures and Activities. This week is Exam week. I had the chance to proctor a class because teachers were suddenly summoned for an emergency meeting. They had a policy that phones should be submitted before getting to class, their teacher collected all the gadgets but one student didn't follow them. I caught her so I had to confiscate her phone.	Confiscating the phone in this situation was an appropriate action because it helps to enforce the rules and expectations of the classroom. It involves enforcing classroom policies and rules to maintain a conducive learning environment. Proctoring the class and confiscating the phone of a student who violated the policy is an example of managing classroom activities.	The experience emphasizes the need for clear communication of expectations and consequences to students. It also highlights the crucial role that teachers play in creating a safe, fair, and supportive learning environment for their students, which can prepare them for success both inside and outside of the classroom.	As a student intern, it is important to reflect on this experience and consider how it can inform future teaching practices. It is important to continue to uphold classroom policies and rules consistently, while also being open to feedback and making adjustments as needed. Additionally, it is crucial to establish clear expectations and consequences for students to maintain a positive learning environment.

Domain 5: Assessment and Reporting Strand 1: Design, selection, organization, and utilization of assessment strategies This week focuses more on checking and recording students' grades because it's almost the deadline. My mentor asked me to help her write down the score on her master lists, as well as input the grades in Excel.	The task involves designing and organizing assessment strategies to monitor student progress and achievement, which is an important aspect of effective teaching and learning.	The experience provides an opportunity to develop our skills in data management, as we learn to accurately record and organize students' scores and grades. It allows us to observe and learn from our mentor's assessment and grading practices, which can inform our own future teaching practices. This will help us understand the importance of effective assessment and record-keeping practices in supporting student learning and success.	As a student intern, it is important to continue learning and growing to become an effective teacher. By applying these skills and knowledge in future teaching experiences, I can become a more effective teacher who is able to assess student progress accurately and provide timely feedback to promote learning.
